Using indirect heat, one places the food item so that it is not directly over flames or coals. This is done by having the fire or coals on only one section of the grill and placing the food item on a part of the cooking grill opposite the flames or coals – for example, having the burners going on the right side of a gas grill but off on the left side or placing the coals on the right side of the grill and no coals on the left side. In a charcoal grill it is best to place a foil pan of water under the food to keep it from drying out. It allows the food to slowly cook all the way through without burning or charring on the outside of the meat. By using a baking sheet pan placed above the grill surface, as well as a drip pan below the surface, it
