

Otama Text Specimen

www.otamatypeface.com

When the All Blacks meet the Wallabies next week in Brisbane they will be chasing a rare trifecta. Victory will coincide with hooker Keven Mealamu's 100th test and will allow the All Blacks to equal the 17-test winning streak record for tier one nations they hold with the Springboks. A triumph at Suncorp Stadium will also mean the All Blacks inflicting a century of test defeats on the Wallabies. The sides have clashed in 145 internationals, well ahead of the 85 tests the All Blacks have had with the Springboks who have been their next most regular opponent in their 493-test history.

These sorts of records are looming as a byproduct of the All Blacks' continuing development since they began the 2011 World Cup with a win against Tonga. They have retained the Bledisloe Cup and picked up the inaugural Rugby Championship to sit beside the other silverware and platters in the trophy cabinet.

---

OTAMA TEXT 14pt

---

When the All Blacks meet the Wallabies next week in Brisbane they will be chasing a rare trifecta. Victory will coincide with hooker Keven Mealamu's 100th test and will allow the All Blacks to equal the 17-test winning streak record for tier one nations they hold with the Springboks. A triumph at Suncorp Stadium will also mean the All Blacks inflicting a century of test defeats on the Wallabies. The sides have clashed in 145 internationals, well ahead of the 85 tests the All Blacks have had with the Springboks who have been their next most regular opponent in their 493-test history.

These sorts of records are looming as a byproduct of the All Blacks' continuing development since they began the 2011 World Cup with a win against Tonga. They have retained the Bledisloe Cup and picked up the inaugural Rugby Championship to sit beside the other silverware and platters in the trophy cabinet. Next up are the Wallabies, a side which has spluttered through this season as injuries and other issues have bitten into their cohesion. They halted some woes when they fielded a huge pack to stagger past Argentina in a substandard contest in Rosario. They used usual lock Sitaleki Timani as a loose forward as a counter to the power of the Pumas.

---

OTAMA TEXT 12pt

---

When the All Blacks meet the Wallabies next week in Brisbane they will be chasing a rare trifecta. Victory will coincide with hooker Keven Mealamu's 100th test and will allow the All Blacks to equal the 17-test winning streak record for tier one nations they hold with the Springboks. A triumph at Suncorp Stadium will also mean the All Blacks inflicting a century of test defeats on the Wallabies. The sides have clashed in 145 internationals, well ahead of the 85 tests the All Blacks have had with the Springboks who have been their next most regular opponent in their 493-test history.

These sorts of records are looming as a byproduct of the All Blacks' continuing development since they began the 2011 World Cup with a win against Tonga. They have retained the Bledisloe Cup and picked up the inaugural Rugby Championship to sit beside the other silverware and platters in the trophy cabinet. Next up are the Wallabies, a side which has spluttered through this season as injuries and other issues have bitten into their cohesion. They halted some woes when they fielded a huge pack to stagger past Argentina in a substandard contest in Rosario. They used usual lock Sitaleki Timani as a loose forward as a counter to the power of the Pumas. But former Wallaby captain John Eales has warned that tactic will not be a panacea against the All Blacks next week in Brisbane and has urged coach Robbie Deans to pick a side to combat the visitors' skills.

The wild winter weather which continues to batter the country should ease within the next 24 hours - but not before one final downpour, WeatherWatch says. The severe weather has moved up the country today and rain over Auckland, Northland, Waikato, Coromandel Peninsula, Bay of Plenty and Taranaki this afternoon and tonight may be torrential at times, WeatherWatch forecaster Philip Duncan said. One last surge of cold air with pockets of rough weather was expected today and tomorrow. This is the tail end of the system that has been with us for a week and a half. Aucklanders - and most other parts of the country for that matter - should see a real improvement in about 24 hours," he said. Waikato Regional Council said water levels in larger rivers were expected to rise further over the next two days.

When the All Blacks meet the Wallabies next week in Brisbane they will be chasing a rare trifecta. Victory will coincide with hooker Keven Mealamu's 100th test and will allow the All Blacks to equal the 17-test winning streak record for tier one nations they hold with the Springboks. A triumph at Suncorp Stadium will also mean the All Blacks inflicting a century of test defeats on the Wallabies. The sides have clashed in 145 internationals, well ahead of the 85 tests the All Blacks have had with the Springboks who have been their next most regular opponent in their 493-test history.

These sorts of records are looming as a byproduct of the All Blacks' continuing development since they began the 2011 World Cup with a win against Tonga. They have retained the Bledisloe Cup and picked up the inaugural Rugby Championship to sit beside the other silverware and platters in the trophy cabinet. Next up are the Wallabies, a side which has spluttered through this season as injuries and other issues have bitten into their cohesion. They halted some woes when they fielded a huge pack to stagger past Argentina in a substandard contest in Rosario. They used usual lock Sitaleki Timani as a loose forward as a counter to the power of the Pumas. But former Wallaby captain John Eales has warned that tactic will not be a panacea against the All Blacks next week in Brisbane and has urged coach Robbie Deans to pick a side to combat the visitors' skills.

The wild winter weather which continues to batter the country should ease within the next 24 hours - but not before one final downpour, WeatherWatch says. The severe weather has moved up the country today and rain over Auckland, Northland, Waikato, Coromandel Peninsula, Bay of Plenty and Taranaki this afternoon and tonight may be torrential at times, WeatherWatch forecaster Philip Duncan said. One last surge of cold air with pockets of rough weather was expected today and tomorrow. This is the tail end of the system that has been with us for a week and a half. Aucklanders - and most other parts of the country for that matter - should see a real improvement in about 24 hours," he said. Waikato Regional Council said water levels in larger rivers were expected to rise further over the next two days.

When the All Blacks meet the Wallabies next week in Brisbane they will be chasing a rare trifecta. Victory will coincide with hooker Keven Mealamu's 100th test and will allow the All Blacks to equal the 17-test winning streak record for tier one nations they hold with the Springboks. A triumph at Suncorp Stadium will also mean the All Blacks inflicting a century of test defeats on the Wallabies. The sides have clashed in 145 internationals, well ahead of the 85 tests the All Blacks have had with the Springboks who have been their next most regular opponent in their 493-test history.

These sorts of records are looming as a byproduct of the All Blacks' continuing development since they began the 2011 World Cup with a win against Tonga. They have retained the Bledisloe Cup and picked up the inaugural Rugby Championship to sit beside the other silverware and platters in the trophy cabinet. Next up are the Wallabies, a side which has spluttered through this season as injuries and other issues have bitten into their cohesion. They halted some woes when they fielded a huge pack to stagger past Argentina in a substandard contest in Rosario. They used usual lock Sitaleki Timani as a loose forward as a counter to the power of the Pumas. But former Wallaby captain John Eales has warned that tactic will not be a panacea against the All Blacks next week in Brisbane and has urged coach Robbie Deans to pick a side to combat the visitors' skills.

The wild winter weather which continues to batter the country should ease within the next 24 hours - but not before one final downpour, WeatherWatch says. The severe weather has moved up the country today and rain over Auckland, Northland, Waikato, Coromandel Peninsula, Bay of Plenty and Taranaki this afternoon and tonight may be torrential at times, WeatherWatch forecaster Philip Duncan said. One last surge of cold air with pockets of rough weather was expected today and tomorrow. This is the tail end of the system that has been with us for a week and a half. Aucklanders - and most other parts of the country for that matter - should see a real improvement in about 24 hours," he said. Waikato Regional Council said water levels in larger rivers were expected to rise further over the next two days.

When the All Blacks meet the Wallabies next week in Brisbane they will be chasing a rare trifecta. Victory will coincide with hooker Keven Mealamu's 100th test and will allow the All Blacks to equal the 17-test winning streak record for tier one nations they hold with the Springboks. A triumph at Suncorp Stadium will also mean the All Blacks inflicting a century of test defeats on the Wallabies. The sides have clashed in 145 internationals, well ahead of the 85 tests the All Blacks have had with the Springboks who have been their next most regular opponent in their 493-test history.

These sorts of records are looming as a byproduct of the All Blacks' continuing development since they began the 2011 World Cup with a win against Tonga. They have retained the Bledisloe Cup and picked up the inaugural Rugby Championship to sit beside the other silverware and platters in the trophy cabinet. Next up are the Wallabies, a side which has spluttered through this season as injuries and other issues have bitten into their cohesion. They halted some woes when they fielded a huge pack to stagger past Argentina in a substandard contest in Rosario. They used usual lock Sitaleki Timani as a loose forward as a counter to the power of the Pumas. But former Wallaby captain John Eales has warned that tactic will not be a panacea against the All Blacks next week in Brisbane and has urged coach Robbie Deans to pick a side to combat the visitors' skills.

The wild winter weather which continues to batter the country should ease within the next 24 hours - but not before one final downpour, WeatherWatch says. The severe weather has moved up the country today and rain over Auckland, Northland, Waikato, Coromandel Peninsula, Bay of Plenty and Taranaki this afternoon and tonight may be torrential at times, WeatherWatch forecaster Philip Duncan said. One last surge of cold air with pockets of rough weather was expected today and tomorrow. This is the tail end of the system that has been with us for a week and a half. Aucklanders - and most other parts of the country for that matter - should see a real improvement in about 24 hours," he said. Waikato Regional Council said water levels in larger rivers were expected to rise further over the next two days.

---

OTAMA TEXT 8pt

---

When the All Blacks meet the Wallabies next week in Brisbane they will be chasing a rare trifecta. Victory will coincide with hooker Keven Mealamu's 100th test and will allow the All Blacks to equal the 17-test winning streak record for tier one nations they hold with the Springboks. A triumph at Suncorp Stadium will also mean the All Blacks inflicting a century of test defeats on the Wallabies. The sides have clashed in 145 internationals, well ahead of the 85 tests the All Blacks have had with the Springboks who have been their next most regular opponent in their 493-test history.

These sorts of records are looming as a byproduct of the All Blacks' continuing development since they began the 2011 World Cup with a win against Tonga. They have retained the Bledisloe Cup and picked up the inaugural Rugby Championship to sit beside the other silverware and platters in the trophy cabinet. Next up are the Wallabies, a side which has spluttered through this season as injuries and other issues have bitten into their cohesion. They halted some woes when they fielded a huge pack to stagger past Argentina in a substandard contest in Rosario. They used usual lock Sitaleki Timani as a loose forward as a counter to the power of the Pumas. But former Wallaby captain John Eales has warned that tactic will not be a panacea against the All Blacks next week in Brisbane and has urged coach Robbie Deans to pick a side to combat the visitors' skills.

---

OTAMA TEXT 7.5pt

---