Clever OpenType input method: All symbols can be accessed using semantic name codes like #wheelchair or #airplane when the ligature feature is turned on.

Each symbol can also be filled or turned into a prohibition sign by simply typing #fill in front and/or #ban behind the pictogram. The width of these special characters will automatically adapt to the width of the symbol character.

Type #pedestrian

Type #fill  #ban

Composite Characters: Easily create combined characters with two or three digits for transport lines, storey number, room numbers and so on. Just type letters and numbers between brackets, e.g. (m1) (b10)

Full Unicode support: All symbols can be used with copy & paste and accessed through the character palette of your OS or application, even if there is no specific support for OpenType layout features.

So you can use Wayfinding Sans Symbols not only in professional design apps, but also in any word processor and even on the web.

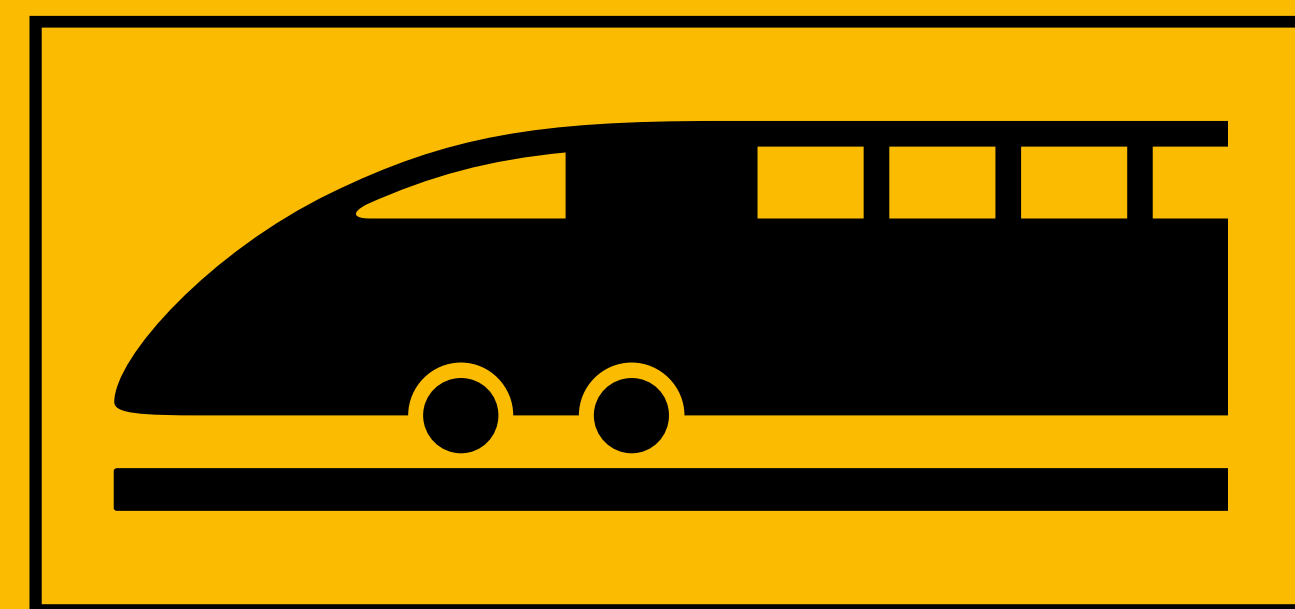

Drawn on a grid: The widths of all symbols follow a grid system, so all symbols will always align perfectly.

Four space characters create the width of one regular symbol. So you might use the space character to align everything without using tables or tab stops.

60 arrows: For the cardinal directions you can choose between 5 different sets of arrows.

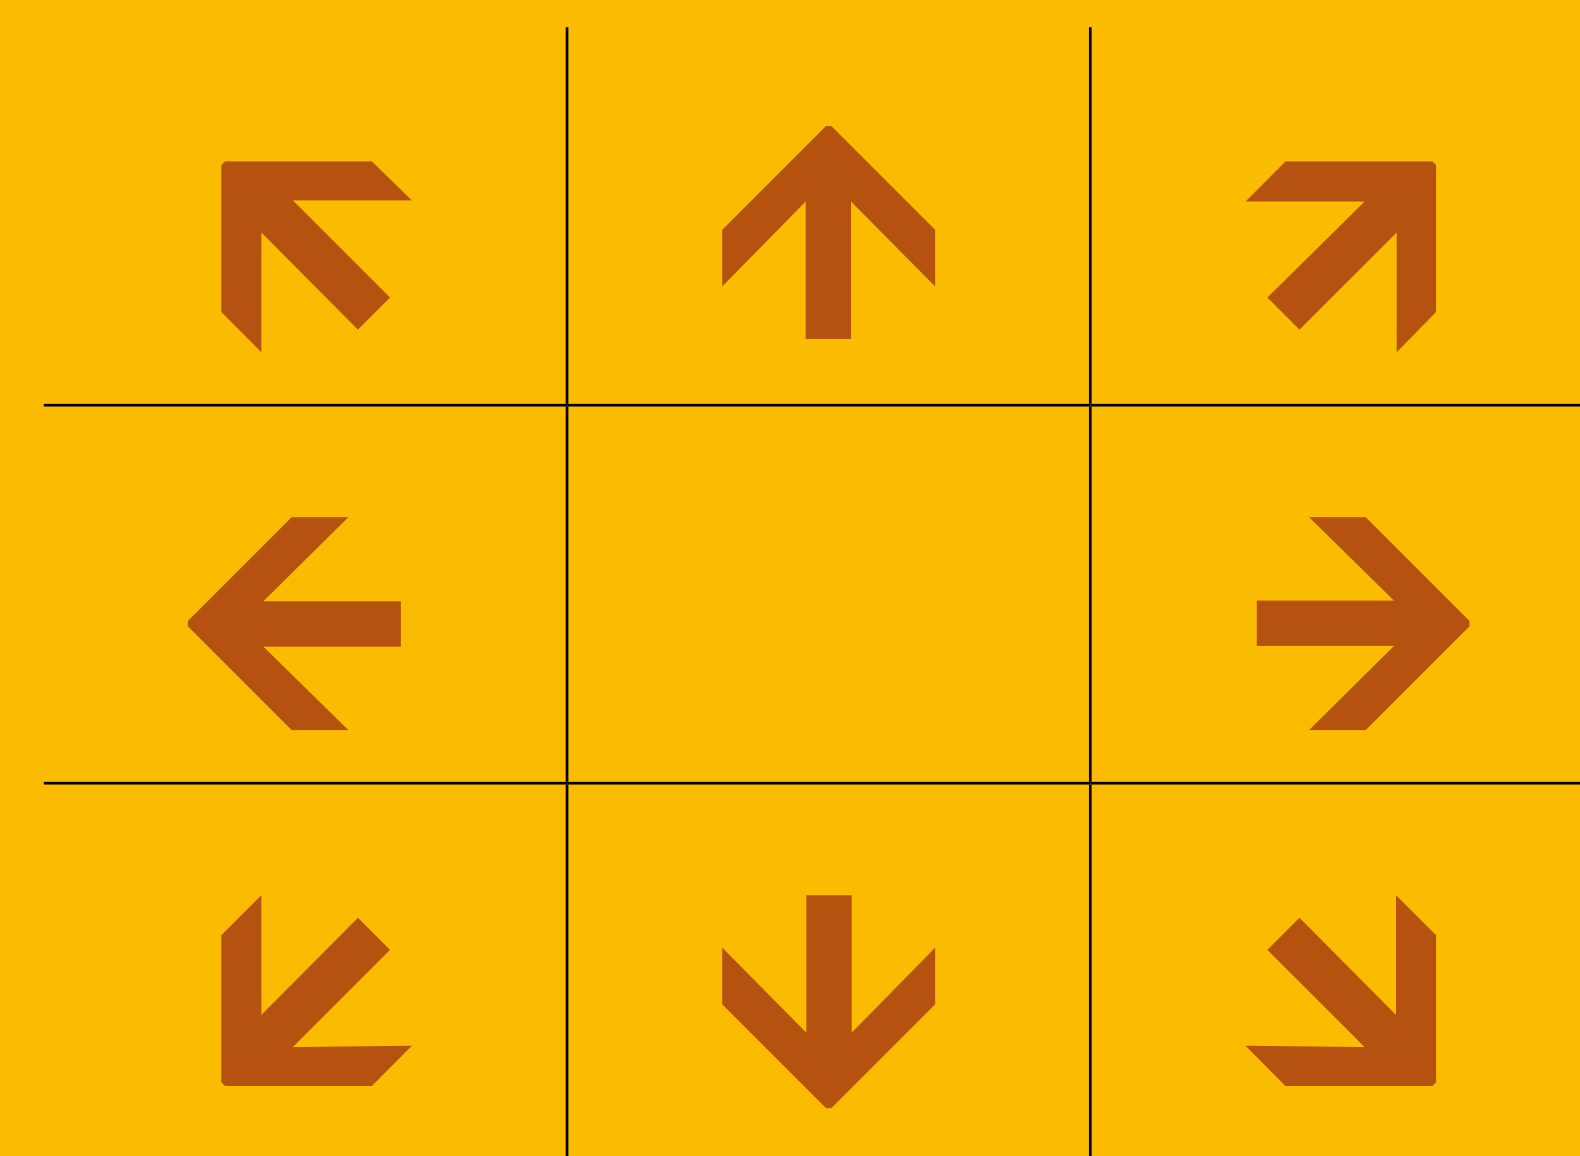

For complex wayfinding situations, the standard arrow set contains 28 arrows, including two 3D arrows for places where you need to differentiate between up/straight and down/back.
